FPCON goes Bravo

By Jim Bennett Editor

USAKA has gone to Force Protection Condition Bravo this week, following Armywide directives and a nationwide trend in the states, according to Lt. Col. Mark Harmon, USAKA provost marshal.

"It has to do with the possible conflict with Iraq, but also the information that came out of the Pentagon and in the states last week where we believe there is an increased threat for terrorist activity," Harmon said. "So all military installations went to FPCON Bravo."

The government increased the civilian threat assessment level in the states to orange, or "high risk," as well, second only to red, for (See WORLD, page 5)

Bike accident turns fatal

A serious bicycle accident turned fatal Wednesday (Kwaj time) when Robert Wagner, 55, died of complications from a severe head injury.

Wagner was riding his bicycle Monday when, at around 7:15 p.m. between the Kwajalein Jr./Sr. High School and Corlett Recreation Center, he lost control of his bicycle and struck his head, according to Kwajalein Police Department reports.

The case is still under investigation, said Tom Webber, director of USAKA Command Safety, and officials are (See INVESTIGATION, page 5)

Love is in the air — Couples recount first meetings

Ah-h-h, romance. No other day of the year says it better than Feb. 14. And what could be more romantic than palm trees, balmy breezes, starlit evenings and rose-colored sunsets. People move here to work, but sometimes they also fall in love.

Just ask Pam Rodkey, a nurse at Kwaj Hospital.

We went to North Point one night and were sitting there gazing at the stars, when I was surprised to see John on one knee asking me to marry him," Rodkey said, describing the proposal from her husband, John Robertson.

Robertson is a helicopter pilot, and it was on one of his flights to Majetto that they first got a look at each other.

'I was in the wrong seat on the helicopter, and John told me to move," laughed Pam. They dated, and shortly after their engagement, they decided to be married at the cross near the airport as the early morning sun rose from the water's edge.

A sandy beach was the setting and bare feet were the rule when Tom Drabeck, MMW field engineer, and Christy Pappas, Roi recreation superintendent, exchanged vows at Roi-Namur's Sally's Point.

One thing that was a little different about this ceremony, though, was the (See LOVE, page 3)

The reality of true love is not prefabricated

Valentine's Day approaches, and we are all struck with thoughts of love and life, life and love or some other such nonsense.

Anyway, in order to fashion the perfect Valentine's Day issue, we asked feature writer Lynn Coppes to scope out the most romantic stories on-island, and she has, starting on Page 1 of today's issue.

Next, I asked my own, personal romance expert, my wife Gina, for advice, and she suggested some memories we share.

There was our first meeting, tending a non-alcoholic bar at a college party. Manny Guzman of Chicago asked me to take his spot because he was going home for the weekend. There was a free T-shirt in the deal and I didn't have anything else to do that night, OK.

Anyway, I met Gina, who apparently had nothing else to do that night either. Then this obsessive boy from Texas, who thought Gina should love him (she I was in Texas working; she was in Okladidn't), pulled a boot knife on me for telling a joke a little too close to "his woman." I talked him down by making a joke, comparing the size of his knife to the mixer bottle I held. It wasn't all that romantic, but I thought then "this Gina gal" was exciting.

Our first date was on Feb. 15, 1992, and was sort of romantic. I went to a party at Jim Bercen's house on the 14th, and besides, who wants to have a first date that may fall apart on Valentine's Day?

She was at Bercen's too, so that was

On the date, she ordered a $3.50 salad for dinner off the appetizer menu and because we both looked young, we got into the skating rink at underage prices. I thought I had an inexpensive, low-maintenance woman on my hands. I would be proved wrong later.

"You could talk about the romantic way you proposed," Gina said.

It happened over a phone conversation. homa student-teaching. I said, "Why don't we get hitched? I'm booked next weekend, but after that looks good."

Our first anniversary was a romantic tear-jerker, too. She was in Texas; I was in Mississippi. She visited that weekend and drove back to her place that day, to teach school the next.

OK, so I'm romantically challenged, but I guess that's my point.

Today you have reality TV's "The Bachelor," "The Bachelorette" and "Joe Millionaire," fabricating these "perfect" scenarios for love and romance. And that's just it. They're fabricated, unreal, created for the viewing populace.

After two seasons, both bachelors are still bachelors. The bachelorette is apparently still seeing the guy from the show, but the final episode has yet to air, so they have to date secretly for now. I don't know what's up with Joe Millionaire, other than he's not really a millionaire, and I'm sure that little bit of deception won't hurt the relationship.

That's why true romantic love stories are news on Page 1. They don't happen often.

The majority of us basically run into someone who loves us for who we are, faults included. Maybe they see more in us than we see in ourselves. Then they sign up for the deal anyway.

And the best moments aren't the crafted, pre-ordained events like the first anniversary planned around a romantic getaway to Aruba, but rather the unexpected first kiss in the hallway of a college dorm; or the knowing look, slight smirk and a wink exchanged when the preacher standing before you drones on.

Maybe it's not the textbook definition of romance and wouldn't make it on reality TV, but it's real.

Customer apologizes for recent outburst

Recently, I went to Macy's West to purchase a single item — 4-inch foam for a boat cushion. Later, I realized I did not receive what I paid for. I returned to the customer service desk at Macy's West to resolve the problem. There, I did not receive a satisfactory answer, which caused me to become frustrated, lose my temper and raise my voice. For this, I apologize to you [Ms. Winnie Lumm] and everyone that witnessed this dissatisfied customer.

Marine guys retire after 75 years

Part II in a series profiling Kwajalein workers retiring this month after 30+ years of service to the island. born and raised on the big island, he's not sure what he'd like to do with his leisure time. "I have friends who have

With 75 years of Kwaj experience between them, Jimmy Auld and Bruce Hashimoto leave the Marine Department and the island March 1.

'The island looked much different'

When Auld landed on Kwajalein to report for work in 1959, the air terminal was across the way from Coral Sands Beach and consisted of three large Quonset huts. The Navy was in charge of the island, and Navy Seabees were busy building homes in the old housing area. He is one of the oldest continuous workers on Kwaj.

"The island looked much different than it does now. For one thing, it was smaller," Auld said.

Jimmy Auld

A mason by trade, he also operated heavy equipment and helped backfill the area where the trailers now stand.

"After we finished with backhoes and bulldozers, trailers came in from the states and we set those up. We used to call that area with the trailers Silver City," he said.

"Global Associates was in charge back then," he continued, "and there were more than 4,000 people here. There was a lot going on."

The Marine Department has been his place of employment for years. At one time, he was deck hand on some of the Global boats and then captain of the ferry Sprint, that shuttled people from Kwajalein, Meck and Ebeye. But the great majority of his years on Kwaj were spent as a heavy equipment operator.

Auld noted that the coral rocks that form the break walls and the perimeter around Kwajalein were all brought in from South Loi Island. "We dynamited over there, broke the rocks up, and then hauled them back to Kwaj by barge."

Recently, he transferred to the tower as marine dispatcher, the position he now holds.

The island of Hawaii is Auld's destination once he leaves Kwaj. Originally born and raised on the big island, he's not sure what he'd like to do with his leisure time. "I have friends who have cattle ranches there, and maybe I'll do a little work for them. And I might get a boat and do some fishing." He thought a little more and added, "I think I'll just wait until I get there."

"A change of scene"

Bruce Hashimoto will close at the end of the month more than 32 years of working on the island. He had worked on Johnston Island for 10 years, but came to Kwaj in 1970 "for a change of scene."

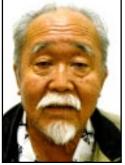

Originally hired as a scheduler for FOM, he eventually became the supplier for the Marine Department, a position he still holds.

"I liked some things a little better in the old days," he said, "but I still enjoy my job and the island."

One of the things he didn't care for in the "old days," though, were the BQ rooms.

"Back then there were these big rooms with 14 guys in there, seven beds and lockers on each side of the room," he said. "It's a lot better now," he added.

He laughed and said that his building was referred to like a ship, and each floor was called first deck, second deck and third deck.

Born and raised on the big island of Hawaii, fishing comes naturally to Hashimoto, and he still loves to get out there and fish from the shore.

"I don't like to fish from a boat because I get seasick," he said. "But on weekends, one of my favorite things to do is go to the Shark Pit, at the end of the island, and fish for mullet or whatever comes in."

He usually gets chunks of fat or trimmings from the butcher to toss in the water to draw out the fish.

Hashimoto will visit with his sister in Los Angeles and then settle in "to see what there is to do." He isn't sure if he wants to retire because he doesn't want a lot of time on his hands, so he may look around for work, keeping to his philosophy.

"Keep moving," he said. "I've seen too many people give up and die. You just gotta keep moving."

Love knows no single course on Kwaj ...

fact that "the water came in and went out a few times over our feet as we stood there," Tom said. "Even the minister got wet feet, but didn't seem to mind."

Six weeks was all it took for Bill and Judy Cleland to know they were in love. Bill, an engineer on Roi, and Judy, a teacher, had both recently lost a spouse. When they were introduced to each other at the Yokwe Yuk Club, "we just clicked," Judy said.

She agrees that it was a short time to get to know each other before getting married back in the states, but "we did it, and have never regretted it."

They've been married now for 10 years.

How about marriage on a golf course? Bob Valencia, a flight safety engineer, loves golf, so the No. 5 tee box seemed like a good spot to exchange vows with Kathy Anderson, commodities specialist for Supply.

"I think we had it here," he joked, "because Kathy probably figured that if the wedding was at the golf course, I'd be sure to show up."

If getting married on a boat under a starry sky has always been your dream, Nate and Shigeko Jackson did just that. Nate, who is captain of the Great Bridge, was driving the catamaran between Kwaj and Ebeye when he first met Shigeko at the Queen of Peace school on Ebeye. At the time, she was living there and teaching Japanese, and it wasn't long before they fell in love.

"We thought the catamaran was the perfect place to be married," said Shigeko.

And so, as planned, the Jelang-K, with the wedding party on board, motored out into the lagoon. As 100 guests looked on, Nate sang to Shigeko, and then they took their vows while the sun slowly disappeared on the horizon.

nally, green, flowed into the yard and settled, by groups, under awnings.

Feb. 9, formerly recognized every year as Liberation Day, is now a day of remembrance, said Master of Ceremonies Noda Lojkar to the assembled USAKA and Republic of the Marshall Islands dignitaries and Ebeye residents.

"That we remember our ancestors ... who gave their lives during the second war," he said.

After welcoming speeches by RMI Senator Christopher Lorok, Kwajalein Negotiating Commission chairman, RMI Foreign Minister Gerald Zackios and Iroij Kotak Loeak, U.S. Ambassador Michael Senko spoke about the past and future of the atoll and its people.

Noting the "closer and mutually beneficial relationships between the U.S. and Marshallese here," Senko announced the Joint Committee Meeting's initiatives including new jobs and food export opportunities for the Marshallese.

Formal speeches done, the container yard was turned into a sports arena with field day events for the schoolchildren.

In the evening, teams played the final games in the basketball and volleyball tournaments held over the weekend.

The USAKA/RMI boys basketball team, composed of Kwajalein residents and Job Corps students, won handily over the Seventh Day Adventist School, 47-28. The Queen of Peace girls volleyball team won the first three of five matches over the USAKA/RMI team made up of Job Corps students.

World events affect island access restrictions ...

emergency status, based on government intelligence that al-Qaida was planning attacks on U.S. interests at home and abroad.

On Kwajalein, that means mission essential vulnerable areas, or MEVAs, undergo a greater scrutiny, with increased patrols and single entry points. Vehicles are parked 50 feet away from the MEVAs. Additionally, USAKA implemented four conditions from FPCON Charlie, including one that requires residents to wear their badges openly when going to public areas. And, as reported in Tuesday's Hourglass, packages coming through DSC are already undergoing additional inspections for sold items going off island, but also items coming on island, Harmon added.

On the other hand, officials have delayed enacting a few conditions from FPCON Bravo, including suspending laundry privileges, the commute list and guest sponsorship.

"We understand the Marshallese community is our partner and not a threat, and we want to support our neighbors," Harmon said.

But those exclusions may change, if the world situation changes, thus allowing only badged workers on island.

"So far the Host Nation Office has been able to work closely with local leaders to minimize the impact to the Marshallese community, but should the FPCON go any higher, we will start to see some major impacts," added island we can't identify."

Maj. David Coffey, chief of USAKA Community Relations. "Laundry may be restricted from the DSC and some access programs may be curtailed."

The Charlie restrictions affect primarily the Marshallese who use Kwajalein's coin-operated laundry facilities daily and also the Marshallese who work as domestics, cleaning homes or caring for children in Kwajalein homes. Those individuals do not have badged access to the island, but enter the DSC through these other programs. The current adult athletics sports league, softball, includes five Marshallese teams, which could also be affected by increased FPCON measures.

Other programs that could be affected include Marshallese business owners, Republic of the Marshall Islands distinguished visitors and guest sponsorship programs.

Residents have practiced these Bravo and some Charlie measures routinely during missions, but rarely when there are no missions. USAKA hit a security high point immediately after the Sept. 11 terror attacks, during which all travel to and from the island was suspended. But that falls under FPCON Delta, the equivalent of the civilian sector's Red status, or "severe risk."

"We're in difficult times," Harmon said. "And it's quite possible we'll see an increase in threatcon in the next two to four weeks. At a certain [FPCON] point, we will have to seriously consider whether or not to allow anyone on the island we can't identify."

Investigation begins, memorial service set for tonight ...

looking into the possible factors that contributed to the accident.

Bystanders and Assistant Fire Chief Jerry Leverett responded to the scene immediately and administered appropriate first aid until paramedics arrived a few minutes after the 911 call, Webber added.

Wagner was taken by ambulance to Kwajalein Hospital where hospital professionals treated him.

"They never gave up trying to save him," said Norm Black, KRS Environmental, Safety and Health manager.

"Friends and co-workers stayed with him the whole time," said Bruce Tuttle, KRS safety engineer.

Tuesday, Wagner was transferred to an Air Force medical evacuation plane flown to Kwajalein from Yakota Air Force Base in Japan.

In the meantime, his wife and eldest daughter were flown from their home in Las Vegas to Honolulu to meet him there.

He was taken to Queens Hospital in Honolulu, where he died the following day.

Wagner came to Kwajalein in early November from the Nevada Test Site.

"If there was something I could recommend to the colonel today that I knew would save a life, I'd do it. But it's not that easy."

— Tom Webber

His wife and minor children — he had seven children in all — were set to join him on island permanently later this month.

On Kwaj, Wagner served as a cost analyst for KRS and was working many of the financial data that had to be transferred from outgoing Raytheon to the new contractor.

"Wagner was also a devout Mormon and avid cycler," Black said. "He was dedicated to his job. And he had a quiet, easy manner about him."

Now Webber, Black and Tuttle will work with police and others to finish the investigation in the next two weeks, after which they may or may not issue recommendations or policy changes to the command.

"We will look at what makes sense and then do the right thing," Webber said. "If there was something I could recommend to the colonel today that I knew would save a life, I'd do it. But it's not that easy."

A completed investigation is required first.

A memorial service will be held at 7 p.m. today at the CAC, hosted by the local Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

Born Nov. 20, 1946, Wagner grew up in Chicago. He earned his bachelor's degree from Idaho State University and his master's from Tulane University.

Wagner worked for EG&G in Twin Falls, Idaho, from 1978 to 1991 when he moved to Golden, Colo. There, he worked for EG&G and Keiser Hill. In 2000, he joined Bechtel at the Nevada Test Site.

Diver delves deep on issues

By Lynn Coppes

Feature Writer

Dive instructor Bruce Brandt is visiting Kwajalein from Kosrae to conduct technical diving classes on "Deep Air" and "Advanced Nitrox" and to present information on the Kosrae Village resort that he owns and operates. He spoke to members of the Dive Club Wednesday night on the technical classes and gave them an overview of the resort.

Bruce Brandt

"Kosrae is different in appearance from Kwajalein," Brandt said. "It's at an elevation of 2,000 feet, and the island is exceptionally green and lush, very jungly." There is no lagoon there - it's not part of an atoll - and has what he called a lovely "fringe" reef.

Accommodations at the resort consist of 10 thatch-roofed bungalows situated right at the water's edge. There is also a full service dive shop located on the premises.

"We are a PADI dive center offering three boats, rental equipment and a training program leading to certification," Brandt said. For those who aren't Kwaj Lodge at 53477.

certified but are wondering what scuba diving is like, a Discover Scuba Dive is available where the novice is taken on a carefully controlled orientation dive in the ocean.

Brandt's technical diving classes include the fundamentals of going "beyond the regular limits of sport diving;" in other words, deeper than the 130foot limit and staying beyond time lim-"It should be mentioned that here at USAKA, recreational diving is limited to 130 feet, and length of time during the dive is based on diving within the recreational dive tables," commented Julio Rodriguez, vice president of the Kwajalein Scuba Club.

"Technical diving takes training and special equipment," Brandt stressed. "There is a lot of preparation and planning even before considering this type of dive, and no one should be doing this without the proper training or equipment."

Brandt also spoke of nitrox, which is simply an addition of extra oxygen to the tank. "All that does is give the diver extra no-decompression-limit time and a wider safety margin," he added. Normal air is 21 percent oxygen; nitrox mixes can be more or less than 36 percent oxygen.

Classes will be conducted at the CRC. Anyone interested can contact Julio Rodriguez at 53674 or Brandt at the Army of One car preps for Daytona

Army News Service

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Jerry Nadeau faces a tough mission in the second of Thursday's 125-mile qualifying races to determine the field for Sunday's 45th running of the Daytona 500.

Nadeau posted the 34th-fastest speed in the No. 1 U.S. Army of One Pontiac Grand Prix during pole qualifying Monday at Daytona International Speedway. He was clocked in 49.205 seconds around the 2.5-mile tri-oval, an average speed of 182.908 mph.

Jeff Green won the pole position with a fast lap of 48.230 seconds (186.606 mph) in the No. 30 America Online Chevrolet. Dale Earnhardt Jr. earned the outside starting spot on the front row with a 48.528-second lap (185.460 mph) in the No. 8 Budweiser Chevy race car, I don't doubt that."

Monte Carlo.

"We weren't as quick as we were in practice," said Nadeau, who had the 14th fastest speed in Saturday's second practice session. "The car just never came up to speed. It's just one of those deals. I am not sure why — whether it's the (restrictor) plate or something else. But we're not worried about it right now. We're just going to get the car ready for the race.'

Crew chief Ryan Pemberton agreed that the black and gold Army of One car wasn't quite up to speed Monday.

"We should have been three-tenths quicker," he said. "I am very disappointed with that lap. I am not disappointed with the race team, not disappointed in the program, just disappointed with that lap. We have to get ready for race trim. We'll have a good

Author talks of American ideal

WASHINGTON — Best-selling author Jeff Shaara says the "idea" of the U.S. is something worth fighting for, and if need be, dying for.

Shaara wants to ensure that Abraham Lincoln's "mystic chords of memory" reach from every patriot grave unto the 21st century generation.

He was in town Feb. 10 for the premiere of "Gods and Generals," a movie based on his best-selling 1996 book of the same name about the first years of the Civil War.

He is the son of author Michael Shaara, whose novel on the Battle of Gettysburg, "The Killer Angels," won the 1975 Pulitzer Prize for fiction, and became the basis of the 1993 film epic "Gettysburg."

The younger Shaara said the main lessons of both books are that the U.S. is an idea and that Americans don't fight for territory or power or loot so much as for that idea.
